Migration and its Impact on Cities

Migration (both internal and external) is one of the trends in the modern global world. Migration, caused by various causes, is becoming a challenge for States and their governments. However, the largest migration flows are observed in cities, which become points of attraction for various reasons. There were 244 million international migrants in 2015. 763 internal migrants. And according to current forecasts, these numbers will only increase creating new global challenges.
